

For most homeowners, finding a roofing contractor is likely a “once-in-a-lifetime” event. It’s not like you have a regular relationship with a roofing company. That was our situation when we purchased a historic home, with multiple buildings on site, that needed roof repair and replacement. Being in a historic district, replacing the cedar roof with cedar was key, long with historic copper work. We also needed a skylight replacement (on an addition) and were planning to add one more.

Art Dias and his team came to our home, inspected all the roof surfaces and determined that certain rooflines had significant useful life remaining, which reduced the project cost by nearly 30%. They prepared a comprehensive bid and there were no cost overruns, no surprises.

As with most major projects, and especially with historic homes, there are always unexpected developments. And this was no exception. Every time that happened, Art and his crews were completely accommodating and didn’t miss a beat. Certain materials were pre-ordered and had to be returned due to changes we requested. No questions asked.

The work crews were amazing. Always on time, never before 8 AM and if they wanted to work past 5, which they did some days, they always asked. If we had a conflict, they would pack up at 5. The job site was always clean, including a full “magnetic sweep” for any nails “that got away” during removal.

We’ve owned six homes and income property over the last thirty plus years. This project was the smoothest we’ve ever done. Eagle Rivet: superior work, exceptional customer service and extremely fair price. Great companies are a reflection of the owners / leaders. We’d recommend without reservation Art Dias and his team to anyone with roofing needs.
